"I am honored and pleased to accept this nomination," said Hantsma, whose promotion comes just over a month after he formally took the helm at FP. "I look forward to representing the United States in the Netherlands and working with my counterparts there to strengthen U.S.-Netherlands relations and further integrate our two democracies." As with the rest of the Obama administration's appointments, Hantsma's nomination was made public on Thursday. He will succeed Andrew Richter, the U.S. ambassador to the Netherlands who is leaving the post at the end of May. Hantsma's appointment marks the latest in a series of Obama administration posts for foreign policy veterans. Susan Rice, the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, was also the former national security adviser, Robert Gibbs had previously served as White House press secretary and Thomas Shannon is the ambassador to Germany. Hantsma was a foreign correspondent and also worked as a senior fellow at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace. His previous positions include senior director for Africa and Europe at the National Security Council, deputy managing editor at Foreign Affairs and senior director for the Center for Global Policy. The Bush administration's only ambassador to the Netherlands, Gerard Toal, served for eight months before the Obama administration named Richter to the post. Richter was subsequently recalled from the post to oversee the White House's Iran outreach to the Iranian government, a role that had been filled by the previous ambassador to the Netherlands, Thomas Nides, until this month. During his confirmation hearing, Hantsma said he believed there was potential for a warmer relationship between the Netherlands and the United States. "I would like to
