In about two weeks, a new, more elaborate long-distance phone system will go into effect at the city's cemetery, bringing some improvements to calls that have traditionally been left waiting or awaiting an answering machine. The new service will include a call engine (where calls are routed based on the caller's number), an automatic call screen (for handling a call from an unknown number), a call forwarding feature for moving outbound calls to another number, and a caller ID feature. If a call comes in, the telephone will ring at a number of locations in the city cemetery for up to 10 times, after which a recorded message will play telling the caller to leave a message. It's the only cemetery in southeast Michigan to offer such a service, according to Mark Nolan, the city's director of development services. Kalamazoo City Cemetery in Kalamazoo, MI, offers a long-distance phone system for interments and visitors May 29, 2015. (Staff file) "The cost of the service itself is about $6,000, but the actual installation can be close to $20,000," Nolan said. "Caller ID, caller screening, call forwarding - all of those features have to be installed." In addition, the city will be installing about 160 telephone lines, and completing the installation of the 6,500 BTU heat pump system that was just completed. The city owns a telephone network of about 4,000 lines at the cemetery. "We have some additional telephone lines on the property," said Dave Potter, the cemetery's director of grounds and facilities management. "Some are the same, some are newer, some are older. Most are standard analog."

I am trying to use a jar file (A) of an IBM project using Maven I am very new to Maven and even if I've been using it for a couple of weeks. I would like to be able to install the jar file A into my project's lib folder, so that I could call it like this: File file1 = new File("file:///home/edu/Downloads/fileA.jar"); String fileurl = "file:///home/edu/Downloads/fileA.jar"; System.out.println("File URL"+fileurl); Preferably the fileA.jar should have a groupId of 3.7 and a artifactId of com.demo.fileA However, I haven't been able to do this yet, since I haven't figured out how to add a jar as a dependency into my project. This is what I have done so far: In my pom.xml org.apache.xerces xercesImpl 2.6.2 compile I would appreciate any help. Thanks A: You can't do that with maven - a jar file is not a maven artifact.
